Here is the latest in our ongoing series of E-Auctions that began with the arrival of Lief and his digital skills in 2012. We designed the print versions to be less expensive to produce and sized to qualify for the least expensive First Class Mail service, so that we could offer less expensive material but still present it with high quality cataloging and photography, and continue to provide print catalogs for all our sales to all our friends and loyal customers.

From the outset, we have strived to make "less expensive" not be "less interesting" or "less desirable." We seek out material that is historic, artistic, appealing, and still within most budgets. The vast history of humans making and collecting coins provide us with a rich pool of material to draw from. Look for historical notes online. Due to the large number of lots we ran out of catalog space for some of them.

A bit of gold opens our sale. Then comes high grade and attractive, rare and unusual, ancient Greek and Roman silver and bronze spanning the ancient world and the centuries—the Greek mainland, Sicily and the islands including Thasos and the Cyclades, a nice offering of coins from the unparalleled BCD Collection of coins of the Peloponnesos, Italy, Britain, and Asia Minor. Look for old collection provenances and many coins with vineyard themes of wine–Dionysos, satyrs, urns, and grape clusters; attractive Roman Republican silver, large flan Imperial bronze, some nice Roman Britain, and some appealing large provincial bronzes, ending with several exquisite condition late Roman bronzes.

The British section samples several areas—an Anglo-Saxon sceat (the recent Tony Abramson sale in London achieved remarkable prices for this series), a bit of short cross, long cross coinage, a rare first issue shilling of Charles II with Thomas Simon's remarkable portrait (an example that appears a bit less fresh sold for $12,500 in London last December; this piece has a superb portrait and a bend in the field, so the estimate is less than a third the London price); a smattering of choice milled coinage including a couple of remarkable copper pieces of George III, a bit of special Scottish, a bit of Irish siege money—in other words, a broad range of British coinage.

The Mike Sussman collection of tokens includes some interesting themes—a bit of naval history, some London building pennies, and political and social issues featuring some of the free speech advocates who fought against the restrictiveness of Georgian England.

We ranged widely in the World coins we picked for our ongoing offering from the collection inspired by James Snowden's "U.S. Mint Collection as published in 1860." Some unusual and not-so-unusual but high grade U.S. material and two pages of medals conclude the sale.

Eion was an important port city that played a vital role in the Peloponnesian War (431-404 B.C.) between the Delian League (Athens and its allies) and the Peloponnesian League led by Sparta. This coinage was minted in large numbers, but nice examples such as this are hard to find. It served the Athenian-Delian League warriors controlling the area after its capture from the Persians c. 475. The curved design, inspired by circular ring stones, resembles scenes found on Archaic Greek intaglios, the type going back to Minoan and Mycenaean times when such designs were often carved on lentil-shaped stones.

23 —. Terone. Circa 490-460 B.C. AR tetrobol. 2.66 gm. 14 mm. Oinochoe with bunch of grapes hanging from neck / Quadripartite incuse square. HGC 3.1, 709. Hardwick Group III, 6. SNG ANS 746. Very Fine; light attractive tone with slight iridescence. Rare. $500

Ex Fred Shore 90 (September 1999) lot 15.

Born to Charles II le Boiteux and Maria of Hungary, Robert I d'Anjou was the hostage of Pedro III de Aragon during the Sicilian Vespers. Upon the death of his brother Charles Martel, he became heir to the Sicilian crown, marrying Yolanda the daughter of Jaime II de Aragon in order to obtain it. Robert faced opposition by the Sicilian barons, however, and lost Sicily. Angevin rule was then limited to the southern part of peninsular Italy. Nicknamed "the peace-maker of Italy" because of the numerous changes he enacted in Naples, he changed his capital from a dirty seaport to an elegant medieval city.

A diademed head right with crescent ear, within ouroboros (beaded serpent circle devouring its own tail) starting at 7 o'clock, legend around / A bird seated right on top of a cross, annulets beside, ouroboros starting at 7 o'clock. S. 777. N. 126. Metcalf 105. Good Very Fine; cabinet toning; well struck; unusual and appealing portrait. Purchased from Spink & Son (tag). $500

This fascinating series of sceats portrays the melding of Anglo-Saxon Christianity and the Norse paganism brought by invaders in the late seventh through mid-eighth centuries. The serpent devouring its own tail or 'ouroboros' had in classical mythology represented infinity, in essence "the myth of the eternal return." However in wider Norse lore, the 'Jörmungandr' is a 'World Serpent' that is made by Thor to surround 'Midgard' (Earth) while grasping its own tail. Were it to let go, a great battle would ensue in which the gods would be slain and the land would burn and eventually be submerged under water. The design of these sceats, combining barbed tongue and hooked tail along with the bird (dove?), cross and annulets, suggest Christian beliefs merged with pagan fear not to invoke Ragnarök, wrath and the end of days.

Ex Baldwins St. James's Auction 7 (21 June 2017) lot 532.

An unusual denomination, product of an inflation that effectively drove the farthing and halfpence out of circulation. There was still a need to make change after these denominations were gone. So, to make change when a twopence was tendered a three halfpence piece could be given for a farthing purchase.

102 Elizabeth I. 1558-1603. AR penny. .55 gm. 13.5 mm. (8.5 grains–8 grains standard.) Fifth issue. Greek cross i.m. (1578-1579). ESC 272 (R). Extremely Fine; handsome, well struck portrait; beautiful irridescent old toning over fresh surfaces. An old bend across the upper left quarter is the problem that brings this piece way down in price. Struck on a defective planchet? Still, a choice coin. Rare. $4000

This was a hastily produced issue. A month after Charles's return from exile in Breda Simon was ordered to "use all speed and diligence" to produce coins to replace the plain coinage of Cromwell and the Commonwealth. The lack of a mark of value was unpopular and the coinage was replaced a year later.

D&F 311. Very Fine; well centered on a generous flan; attractive old toning. Among the finest known of this rare denominaiton. $1500

Purchased during a visit to Seaby in the 1990s. Arguably one of the finest known; the piece in the 2000 Millenial sale (Whytes) has been heavily scored on the obverse; the Lockett piece is very small with the arches of the crown reaching the edge of the coin on what is essentially an undersized flan. Among the few other examples I found offered in the last decade this one combines the best centering and completeness of detail as much or more than any other, including the Stack's Tallent piece (April 2008) which sold for $4000. That piece was partly struck off the flan and the obverse crown was more crude.

A rare occurrence caused a struck coin not ejecting. As additional blanks are fed in the reverse of the initial coin acts as a die, resulting in a brockage for that piece. In time, after more blanks are inserted, the cap metal is pushed around the buildup. When it finally comes away the obverse of the initial piece, the cap piece, is present but somewhat flattened. The edges of the coin are curled around creating a thimble effect.
